National Tribal Awards

1. Background

The Scheduled Tribe (ST) population in India accounts for 8.2% of the total population. The Human Development Indicators (HDI) of the ST population continues to be much lower than the rest of the population in terms of all parameters such as education, health, income, etc. To further compound the problem, these deprived sections of the society also suffer from geographical and cultural exclusion, which are not reflected in the HDI.

In spite of these adverse conditions in which they live, several members of the Scheduled Tribes manage to excel in different fields. Their achievements are made all the more precious by the fact that the success has been achieved in the face of adversity and with strength, initiative and determination. Such success stories should be publicly recognized so that the individuals concerned become role models for future generations of the tribal population. Such recognition will also go a long way in reinforcing a positive image of tribal people and in moulding the societal mind to accept and encourage the versatile role of tribal people in the Indian society. In order to recognize such achievements, the Ministry of Tribal Affairs instituted "National Tribal Awards" also known as the Rashtriya Janjatiya Puraskar from the year 2008.
