The minister said the introduction of the e-Office system was a major step forward in administrative reform. "This system will make it easy to process files quickly and without unnecessary delays. Since everything is tracked digitally, there will be no confusion or blame game between staff and officers. More importantly, files will now be safe from theft, loss, or even damage in case of incidents like fire, a digital platform would function like manual file systems with note files and current files, but with far greater convenience. "Files can now be cleared from any location, at any time, without the need for physical presence in the office. Urgent files can also be marked separately so they get top priority. Soon Endowments Department will use the same services in Yadagiri Gutta and the 30 other temples across the state," she said, adding that the influence of intermediaries like PAs and CCs in file movement will reduce drastically. "
