Revitalising Inland Waterways for Economic Growth, Sustainable Tourism

Ritesh Kumar

India has an extensive network of inland waterways, comprising rivers, canals, backwaters and creeks. However, the utilisation of waterways for economic activities remains significantly underexplored when compared to developed nations. Currently, India heavily relies on road and rail for hinterland connectivity, relegating domestic waterways—both coastal shipping and inland waterways to a limited role, despite it being considered a more cost effective and environment friendly mode of transport for freight. Nevertheless, Inland Water Transport (IWT) emerges as a promising supplement to alleviate the strain on railways and reduce congestion on roadways. Beyond its primary role in cargo movement, the IWT sector also contributes to the burgeoning tourism sector.

To propel the integration of waterways into the national transport framework, the National Waterways Act of 2016 has designated 111 inland waterways as 'National Waterways (NWs)', encompassing a vast network spanning 20,275 kms across 24 states in the country. Leveraging the provisions of the legislation, the government has adopted a comprehensive policy aimed at steering the nation towards a future where these water bodies become engines of economic growth and vibrant ecosystems for tourism.

Recent statistics reveal a noteworthy surge in waterway cargo, with 86.47 million metric tonnes (MMT) moved from April to November 2023, indicating a substantial 7.49% increase compared to the same period in 2022.

Furthermore, the Inland Waterways Development Council (IWDC), launched by the Ministry of Ports, Shipping & Waterways (MoPSW) on October 12, 2023, stands as a pioneering initiative. Chaired by the Union Minister for Ports, Shipping & Waterways, this council includes participation from State Governments/UTs and other Union Ministries as members. The IWDC is tasked with the responsibility of significantly boosting cargo, passenger movement and river cruise tourism, marking a pivotal stride in the comprehensive development of Inland Water Transport (IWT) in India.

IWDC recently concluded its maiden meeting in Kolkata, during which, Shri Sarbananda Sonowal, Minister of Ports, Shipping & Waterways, laid out ambitious plans, including a Rs 45,000 crore investment for the development of river cruise tourism.

Out of this, Rs 35,000 crore is earmarked for cruise vessels and an additional Rs 10,000 crore is allocated for the development of cruise terminal infrastructure by 2047. This visionary investment aims to tap into the immense potential of India's inland waterways, leveraging them as conduits for economic growth and commerce.

Furthermore, a substantial investment of Rs 15,200 crore, committed at the

Navigating the Seas of Change ICT Jobs in the Maritime Domain

Prateek Singh

The maritime industry represents one of the oldest industries known to man. From time immemorial, human beings have been navigating the water ways as a medium for trade, leisure, basic transport and a myriad of other things including war between nations over territorial rights. The water ways also present dynamics in international relations among countries vying for the control of water locked mineral resources, making the sector even more critical in today's globalised world.

Hence, the integration of Information and Communication Technology (ICT) into the various domains of the maritime industry as well as organisations providing services to the maritime sector has become a focal point for strategic development. ICT plays a critical role in positioning maritime organisations for growth and reducing operational costs, ensuring survival in a competitive landscape.

ICT is not merely a technological component, it emerges as a strategic business tool. Organisations in the maritime sector leverage ICT to gain a competitive edge, streamline operations and enhance overall efficiency. ICT also plays a pivotal role in positioning maritime organisations within the marketplace. Whether through advanced tracking systems, efficient communication channels or data analytics, ICT becomes instrumental in maintaining a competitive stance.

Another key consideration is the role of ICT in reducing the cost of doing business. From optimised logistics to streamlined communication, technology contributes immensely to cost efficiency in the maritime domain.

India's IT-Driven Maritime Vision

India, with its rich maritime history, is embarking on a transformative journey towards 'Maritime Vision 2047'. This ambitious vision encompasses ten key themes aimed at revolutionising the maritime industry. Central to this vision is the development of cutting-edge port infrastructure, logistic efficiency through technology and becoming a global leader in shipbuilding and repairing.

The vision places a significant emphasis on infrastructure augmentation and promotes green initiatives, aiming to increase renewable energy usage to over 60%. Emphasising 'waste to wealth' principles, sustainable

Gandhian Perspective: Solutions to Present Day Challenges

S B Singh

One of the most profound quotations of Mahatma Gandhi is "My life is my message." What was his life and what was his message? Perhaps Gandhi is the most written - about personality of all time. Scholars, both Gandhian and non-Gandhian, have written in detail about his philosophy, his life, his contribution, and his legacy.

Gandhi and His Philosophy

Gandhi preached the basics of humanity, not its abstract principles. He never acted like an angel from the heaven and preaching from a high moral ground. He was simple, down to earth. Secondly, Gandhi was not a theoretician, he was a man of action. He always walked the talk. He always practiced what he preached. In fact, his precepts followed from his practice and experience. Thirdly, he was not so much into analysing the human predicament, but bringing a change in the human situation. Gandhi believed that change need not be revolutionary. His statement, "In a gentle way, you can shake the world" is testimony to his conviction that most profound changes come not with bloodshed, hatred and violence, but in a gentle, non-violent, peaceful manner.

Nelson Mandela, who adopted Gandhian methods to fight apartheid, rightly said that "Gandhi was born in India, but was made in South Africa." Gandhi developed and applied all his tools and techniques of struggle against injustice in South Africa first, and only then, in India. Gandhi chose non-violent means to attain freedom from British rule. He was not looking only for political change, but also change in all spheres of human activity. His action was limited at health, cleanliness, education, uplift of the weaker sections, women, cooperative and environment, and everything else. This is a summary of his basic philosophy.

Truth: The moral aspects of truth include non-violence, self-control, and justice. In fact, truth constitutes the very foundation of life. Truth, in its absolute sense, makes its seeker one with god. Truth leads to non-violence and ahimsa, which is a positive virtue of kindness and compassion.

Non-violence: In the words of Gandhi, not to hurt any living being is ahimsa. But it also includes shunning evil thoughts, lying, hatred, and ill thoughts about others. Gandhi stated that "while violence is the weapon of the weak, non-violence is the weapon of the strong." The courage for non-violence comes from truth. Non-violent struggle is based on the willingness to understand the opponent's point of view and also its acceptance if it is the right view. Gandhian concept of non-violence remains a reliable approach to various conflicts that we witness today.

However, Gandhi was not a utopian and he knew well that absolute non-violence may not be possible in all circumstances. He was equally emphatic in stating that non-violence should not be equated with cowardice. Gandhi favored using violence over succumbing to cowardice, affirming, "I do believe that, where there is only a choice between cowardice and violence, I would advise violence."

Khadi in Contemporary Couture Weaving Tradition into Modern Fashion

Dr. Janmay Singh Hada

The Khadi movement initiated by Mahatma Gandhi in 1918 as a symbol of India's quest for freedom and economic self-sufficiency, has now seamlessly integrated itself into India's and even the global fashion landscape. Evolving from its historical roots in ancient craft traditions, Khadi represents a contemporary embodiment of Gandhi's call for self-sufficiency, aligning perfectly with the "Make in India" initiative, thus promoting local empowerment. This exceptional fabric encapsulates values such as sustainability, and resilience, earning it the title of "fabric of the nation." Khadi's rich history serves as a living testament to India's enduring ideals, interwoven into its cultural narrative. Just as Mahatma Gandhi harnessed its potential during the struggle for independence, Prime Minister Shri Narendra Modi has also embraced Khadi as a symbol of self-reliance and economic growth. The fabric's rich history serves as a living testament to India's enduring ideals, interwoven into its cultural narrative. The Khadi Renaissance

In 1921, the establishment of the first Khadi production center in Kathiawad, Gujarat, marked the inception of a rich and enduring history that persists to this day.

Following India's independence, the Khadi Village Industry Commission (KVIC) Act of 1956 was enacted with the overarching objective of strategically planning, fostering, coordinating, and supporting the development
