A Guide to Better Communication with Persons with Disabilities

What crosses your mind when you come across a person with disability? Are you intrigued by what the person can't do rather than what he can? Is a disabled person the child of any lesser God? Why then, do we discriminate against them?

The next time you meet a person with disability, interact with such a person as an equal. Here are a few tips:

- If you don't know how to break the ice and begin a conversation, relax and let the person with disability take the lead.
- Be positive about the person. Explore your mutual interests. You'll surely discover an interesting personality.
- Offer assistance if sought, but avoid being over-enthusiastic. Respect the person's right to indicate the kind of help needed.
- Never push a wheel chair without first asking the occupant how to handle it.
- Don't move a wheel chair or crutches or other aids out of reach of the user.
- Avoid bringing in the topic of disability but discuss it if the topic comes up naturally.
- Be accommodative. A person with disability may need more space or time to speak.
- Appreciate what the person can do. Remember that difficulties the person must be facing may stem more from society's attitude and barriers than from disability itself.
- Converse directly with the person with disability. Don't consider a companion to be conversational go-between.
- Give your undivided attention to the disabled person while speaking. Respect his/her views. While speaking to such a person your attitude should be encouraging rather than correcting.
- While talking to a person who has difficulty in speaking, ask questions that require short replies or can be replied by gestures.
- Speak calmly, slowly and distinctly to a person having hearing problem.
- When dining with a disabled person, offer help to cut food if needed or asked for. It may be more comfortable to ask if the person would prefer to have his food cut in the kitchen. If you are with a visually impaired person, explain where the dishes, utensils and items of use are placed on the table.
