By offering a centralized platform for aggregating, filtering, and presenting case-related data, the system ensures high levels of flexibility, accuracy, and efficiency. One of the major advantages of DCSIR is its ability to minimize repetitive data requests by leveraging information already available in the Case Information System (CIS) database. This not only reduces administrative burden but also enhances the speed and consistency of judicial data reporting.

The launch of DCSIR marks another milestone in Rajasthan's commitment to modernizing court operations through technology.

Implementation of Online RTI portal by Madras High Court

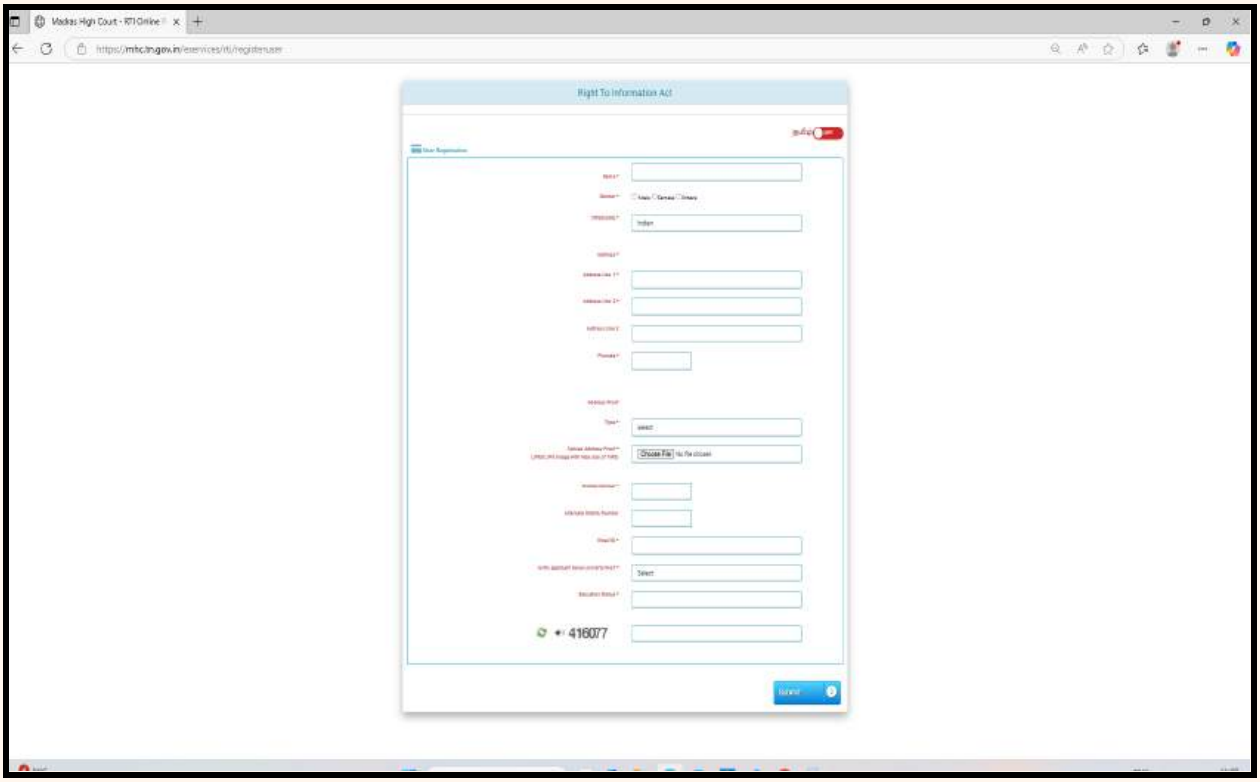

In a major step toward strengthening transparency and citizen engagement, the Madras High Court has launched a dedicated Right to Information (RTI) Portal for both the High Court and the District Judiciary. Officially rolled out on 24th July 2025, the portal is accessible at https://mhc.tn.gov.in/eservices/rti.

This user-friendly platform empowers citizens to file online applications under the RTI Act, 2005, with clear guidelines and a comprehensive user manual available to assist applicants through the process. Designed with accessibility in mind, the portal supports both English and Tamil, ensuring wider reach across diverse user groups.

A key feature of the portal is its intelligent sorting mechanism, which prioritizes applications that involve matters concerning the life or liberty of a person. Applicants can also track the status of their requests and appeals in real time, fostering greater transparency and accountability in judicial governance.

To streamline the process further, the portal integrates secure online payment gateways for RTI fees, making the entire experience seamless and efficient.

This initiative marks a significant advancement in digital public service delivery by the judiciary.
