What is Mediation?

Mediation is one of the Alternative Dispute Resolution Methods contemplated under Section 89 of the Code of Civil Procedure enacted by the Parliament. Mediation is a process in which a neutral third party assists the disputing parties to creatively resolve their disputes without going to trial. Mediation presents a unique opportunity for dispute resolution with the involvement and participation of all the parties and their advocates. A neutral third party called "mediator" uses special negotiation skills and communication techniques to help litigants bridge their differences and find a solution to their dispute. Mediation always leaves the decision making power with the parties. A Mediator does not decide what is fair or right or apportion blame. Rather, a mediator acts as a catalyst to bring the two disputing parties together by defining issues and eliminating obstacles for communication and settlement.

What is Mediation?

- 1 Disputes can be dealt with promptly.
- 2 It provides an opportunity to address the situation before the problem accelerates.
- 3 Parties control the outcome of the dispute. It provides a win win situation for both the parties as they play an important role in formulating the terms of the settlement.
- 4 Improves relationship between disputing parties.
- 5 Creates a forum where disputes and issues can be heard and addressed by the parties with the help of a neutral third party.
- 6 It saves money as the disputes are promptly settled or if not settled are referred back to the court immediately.

Mediation is....

- 1 Voluntary.
- 2 Confidential - only you decide what information may be shared with the other party or the court.
- 3 Transparent - there are no surprises in mediation.
- 4 Time and cost efficient.
- 5 Informal - focusing on the parties' interests rather than the rules of procedure and evidence.
- 6 Flexible - enabling the parties to resolve the dispute by themselves.
