ANNEX 2 - Technical Specifications & Quality Standards of LIQUID MEDICAL OXYGEN IP

To ensure patient safety, the LMO must meet the following criteria:

Feature	Requirement
Purity	Not less than 99.5% v/v oxygen.
Moisture Content	Less than 5 ppm .
Certification	Must comply with Indian Pharmacopoeia (IP) or equivalent global standards.
Compliance	PESO (Petroleum and Explosives Safety Organization) certified transport and storage.

Liquid Medical Oxygen (LMO) is regulated as a "Drug" under the Drugs and Cosmetics Act (1940) and must comply with the standards set by the Indian Pharmacopoeia (IP). The analysis procedure ensures the gas meets specific purity and safety levels before it reaches the patient bedside. Here is the breakdown of the analysis and quality standards.

1. Regulatory Standards (IP 2022 / IP 2018)

LMO produced by air liquefaction must meet the "Oxygen" monograph requirements. These are significantly stricter than industrial oxygen.

Parameter	Limit (IP Standards)
Oxygen Purity	Not less than 99.5% v/v
Carbon Dioxide ()	Not more than 300 ppm
Carbon Monoxide ()	Not more than 5 ppm
Moisture / Water Vapor	Not more than 67 ppm
Appearance	Colorless, odorless, and tasteless
Other Impurities	Free from halogens, polymers, and oxidizing substances

2. Core Analysis Procedures

The testing is typically conducted by NABL-accredited laboratories or in-house quality control units at the hospital or manufacturing site.

A. Purity Assay (Identification)

The most common method is the Paramagnetic Analyzer or the Copper-Ammonia Volumetric Method.

- Paramagnetic Method: Uses the physical property that oxygen is attracted into a magnetic field. This provides a real-time, digital percentage reading.
- Chemical Absorption: Oxygen is absorbed in an alkaline solution of cuprous chloride or pyrogallol; the remaining volume of "non-condensable" gases is measured to determine the O₂ percentage.

B. Impurity Testing (Trace Analysis)

- Carbon Monoxide (CO): Analyzed using Infrared (IR) Spectroscopy or detector tubes (like Dräger tubes). High levels of are toxic and strictly prohibited.
- Carbon Dioxide (CO₂): Measured via IR sensors or by passing the gas through a barium hydroxide solution; any turbidity indicates presence.
- Moisture Content: Measured using an electronic Hygrometer or a dew-point meter. LMO must be exceptionally dry to prevent freezing in the vaporizers or regulators.

3. Statutory Compliance in India

Analysis is only one part of the legal requirement. For LMO systems in hospitals, the following must be maintained:

- PESO Certification: The Petroleum and Explosives Safety Organization (PESO) regulates the storage tanks (static and mobile pressure vessels).
- Certificate of Analysis (CoA): Every batch/tanker of LMO delivered must be accompanied by a CoA from the manufacturer verifying it meets IP standards.
- Logbook Maintenance: Hospitals are required to maintain records of purity checks and pressure levels daily.
- Third-Party Testing: It is recommended to have the LMO analyzed by an external NABL lab at least once or twice a year to validate the integrity of the hospital's internal pipeline system (MGPS).

4. Handling & Sampling Precautions

Since LMO is stored at approximately -183°C, sampling requires:

- Vaporization: The liquid must be passed through a sample vaporizer to convert it to a gas at ambient temperature before it enters the analyzer.
- Cryogenic Safety: Use of cryogenic gloves and face shields is mandatory to prevent cold burns.
- Purging: The sampling line must be thoroughly purged with the test gas to ensure no atmospheric air (which contains ~21% Oxygen and ~78% Nitrogen) contaminates the 99.5% purity reading.
