

Community Participation

“An emphasis on participation has links with the interest in democracy in community organization and in self-help and political incorporation in the community developmental aspects.”

Among the features most often recommended are:

- parent enrolment in adult education and parenting education programs;
- cooperative strategies for extending the school curriculum beyond the school walls;
- efforts to help parents provide learning experiences at home;
- home visits by personnel trained to facilitate home-school communication;
- in-classroom involvement of parents, business leaders, and citizens;
- summer enrichment programs for both parents and children;
- community-based learning;
- use of school facilities for community activities; and
- university participation in an advisory and supportive role.
